Mrs. Marshall Edward Price, Jr.

Price-Carson Vows Exchanged

The marriage of Miss Catherine Norris Carson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Aurelius Carson, of Concord, to Marshall Edward Price, Jr. son of Mr. and Mrs. Price of Pamplin, took place Saturday afternoon, November 1, at 4:30 in Mt. Olivet United Methodist Church, Lynchburg, Virginia.

The Rev. J. Milton Shackelford, Jr., pastor of the church officiated at the double ring ceremony. Mr. Harold Wright, pianist, provided nuptial music.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a gown of white peau de soie designed in an Empire silhouette. The molded bodice of peau d'ange lace had a high scalloped neckline and Bishop sleeves. Appliques of lace etched in seed pearls enhanced the A-line skirt and circular chapel train. Her tiered veil of illusion was attached to a face framing head piece of Alencon lace petals and seed pearls. She carried a prayer book covered with white lace and topped with a white orchid.

Miss Judith Marie Burge, of Concord, was maid of honor and the bride's only attendant. She wore an ankle -length gown of turquoise karate. Her gown was designed with an Empire waist and leg of mutton sleeves. Lace flower appliques encircled the sleeves and bodice. She wore a matching headpiece and carried a cascade bouquet of white carnations and pink roses.

Mr. Price was his son's best man. Ushers were Richard Wayne Price, brother of the bridegroom, and Thomas Eagle Jr. of Lynchburg.

Following the ceremony, the bride's parents were hosts for the reception at their home.

After a short wedding trip, the couple will make their home in Lynchburg.

Bureau Approves Resolutions

The Appomattox Farm Bureau, at its annual meeting Saturday, Oct. 25, gave their approval to several resolutions brought to their attention by incoming president Walter Henry.

These resolutions, first approved by the county bureau, then are subject to state Farm Bureau member approval, explained Mr. Henry at the state convention in Roanoke set for November 18-20.

The Appomattox Farm Bureau voted approval to fight any legislation to permit only commercial truckers to transport animals in and out of Virginia.

Resolved: that the state's two line plants, Appomattox and Staunton, be kept open.

In matters of county interest the Bureau approved requesting the Board of Supervisors to make a study of convenient garbage dumps throughout the county. Also, that the term of president of the Bureau be restricted to two years.

The Bureau also voted to change by-laws to permit three board members from each magisterial district.

Outgoing president John Hix urged members to use the "slow moving" vehicle markers. Mrs. Hix urged members to purchase fire extinguishers and reminded them that U. S. flags are for sale. The state director, James Rea made a report as did Herbert Goodman, district insurance advisor from Cumberland.

Davis Speaks On Constitution

Senator of Virginia's Tenth District, James Davis, addressing the Appomattox County Farm Bureau said that sometime in 1970 voters will have an opportunity to vote approval or non-approval of proposed changes in the Constitution of Virginia.

In January of the new year, he said, the General Assembly will vote on the revision, climax of months of work and a 59 day session by the extra session of the General Assembly called in 1969.

The Senator said that although he would like to discuss these changes with more of the people of this area that time simply does not permit as many visits as he would like. He said that his 10th district covers 70 more square miles than the entire state of Delaware.

Last general revision of the Constitution was in 1902, he said. There were 1500 words in Virginia's first Constitution; 35,000 words in the present one. The revised version will cut the Constitution to 18,000 words.

Among the committeeships Senator Davis serves on are Privileges and Elections, Education and Public Institutions, Agriculture, Roads and Internal Navigation. All of these committees were called upon for study of the Constitution and Amendments.

Among the changes proposed: General Assembly will meet for 90 days in "even years"; 30 days in "odd years." and at any time the Governor chooses to call the Assembly together.

The revisions will also affect school financing and support, financing of public indebtedness and a capital city amendment permitting the General Assembly to enlarge the capital city, compensating adjacent counties, cities or towns for their losses.

Placing second in the contest was Ronnie Eagle with 146 cans sold. Ronnie Eagle received a fishing rod and reel for his efforts. Third place and a hunting coat went to Dennis Stanley with 112 cans sold. John Smith, last years winner, placed fourth with 73 cans. John received a hunting knife. Fifth place and a pocket knife went to David Harris who sold 58 cans.

Chief Hurt At Fire

Fire chief C. R. (Skinney) Wooldridge was injured in a loblolly pine fire on Ferguson property near the N & W tracks Tuesday evening, Oct. 28.

Approximately 1/4 acre of woodland was destroyed, and Warren Taylor, county forester, says the fire would have been much worse with out the prompt help of Appomattox volunteers. The fire escaped, it is thought, from an unattended campfire.

Commodity Legislation Discussed

Farm commodity legislation is now entering a crucial development period, according to Carroll G. Brunthaver, Associate Administrator of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service (ASCS) of the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

Farm programs are sought which will help farmers share more equitably in the fruits o advancing technology and the benefits of the farmer's own efficiency. At the same time, the ASCS official said, "it is just about essential that program costs be checked, in order to be acceptable to Congress."

Farm programs for the 1970's are expected to be attuned to markets, both foreign and domestic, in promoting sales of farm crops and making commodity production adjustments.

Mr. Brunthaver said, "we must avoid decisions that ignore market opportunities and result in the loss of the farmer's markets to synthetic and foreign competition, The U. S. has the most modern and efficient marketing system the world has known, but if we are not careful, we will continue to limit the effectiveness of this system to seek out and expand demand for what the farmer wants to produce."

He cited the general recommendations Secretary of Agriculture Clifford M. Hardin made when he appeared before the House Agriculture Committee. Mr. Brunthaver urged that the statement be read in detail. He pointed out that the Secretary's approaches to farm programs would give participating farmers more freedom of choice than they have now and would not penalize farmers who chose to stay out of Federal farm programs entirely.

The ASCS official concluded: "We are dealing with national policy in a time of great change, not only in agriculture, but in American society. Americans have become an urban people in just a very few decades, and we are feeling the pressures. The minority remaining in agriculture - slightly over 5% - find that their lives are drastically altered by changes in technology, communication, and the structure and organization of farming itself.

"Yet any new age must be dealt with in terms of the problem and circumstances it presents -- not in terms of devotion to some traditional but outworn system. We must deal with the world as it really is. And this is what we are trying to do in the development of farm and food policies for the 1970's."
